

Pablo {{SURNAME}}

Velarqo

{{UK_NUMBER}}

post@velarqo.com

velarqo.com

27 October 2026

{{PHOTO}}

Jane Example
EXAMPLE WINDOWS LIMITED
Unit 4, Sample Trading Estate
Mill Lane
Anytown
Yorkshire
YO1 1AA

Dear Jane,

I've written rather than emailed because I'd rather be the one letter on your desk than the fortieth email in your inbox.

Your website says Example Windows has been at it since 1998, and Companies House has the limited company from 2009. A firm trading that long has probably sent out a few hundred quotes that went quiet: not a no, just nothing. They sit in old files or the job system, and nobody has the time to go back through them.

That is the only thing I do. I take a firm's old quotes that never turned into a job, three months to two years old, and get back in touch with each homeowner by text, in your name. This is the message they would get, word for word:

"Hi, it's Example Windows. We quoted for your windows a while back. Did you ever get that sorted?"

Anyone who says they are still interested goes straight into your diary for a survey. Anyone who says no is left alone for good. You only pay for surveys that get booked, and the terms are agreed in writing before anything starts.

I should be straight with you: Velarqo is new, and you would be one of the first firms I work with. I run it myself, so you would deal with me, not an account manager.

Here is a small way to test it. Pick five old quotes, ring me, and read them to me. Ten minutes. I'll tell you honestly whether they are worth chasing, and you decide from there. No spreadsheet, nothing to send over.

My number is {{UK_NUMBER}}. If you would rather write, post@velarqo.com comes straight to me. The code at the bottom opens a short page on how it works.

Yours sincerely,

Pablo {{SURNAME}}
Velarqo

How it works, two minutes:
velarqo.com/windows

